Here are some additional ways we can help protect the environment

1. Contain your container waste. Buy a portable coffee cup. If 1,000 people drank their java from reusable coffee cups for one year, we would prevent more than 260,000 disposable coffee cups from ending up in landfills.
2. Run on your own energy. Trim your waistline and conserve energy by using stairs instead of escalators and moving walkways.
3. Bag it. Bring your lunch to work in a reusable container. Approximately 1 trillion plastic sacks are consumed worldwide each year and less than 1 percent of those sacks are recycled.
4. Two sides to every story. Make double-sided copies whenever possible. Or save your one-sided copies for scratch paper.
5. Using the cooler is cooler. Refill with a reusable water bottle. Americans are consuming water from more than 70 million disposable plastic bottles each day. And only 14 percent of those bottles are being recycled.
6. Hitchin' a ride. Car pooling at least twice a week can fatten your wallet, reduce vehicle emmissions and lessen congestion on our roadways.
7. Lights out. If you plan to leave a room for more than five minutes, turn the lights off on your way out.
8. Save power, not your screen. Don't use screen savers. They prevent your computer from going into power-save mode.
9. Stop the presses. Only print what you need. You can become more efficient and better organized if you store documents electronically, rather than in the dusty old filing cabinet...and it saves paper.
10. Give your office equipment time off too. Turn your computers, printer and fax machines off at night and during your days off.
